Following the publication of an article of mine about Kazakhstan's chances to bring peace to Israelis and Palestinians and to resolve the Palestinian problem once for all, a Muslim friend wrote to me, asking me to expand on the reasons for some of my proposals. The present article is my reply to his questions. My previous articles about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (including subtitles and units) and links to them you will find at the end of the present article.

Introduction

What most people do not properly assess about the Israeli/Palestinian conflict is the inevitable fact that every development does not only count as such, but it also adds on the accumulated problems, which therefore involve -amongst others- increased mistrust, unreadiness to negotiate, unwillingness to discuss about a common future, total disbelief of the intentions of the other side, and suspicion about the reliability of the interlocutors.

As I fully understand this situation, I don't believe that peacemaking between Israelis and Palestinians would be an easy affair. In fact, the negotiations are always difficult between two parts of which

- the winner is not sure of his victory, and
- the loser reached a level in which he has nothing more to lose.

This is a very dangerous situation.

I. Between Israelis and Palestinians peace can be achieved with justice only from now on

In this regard, all those, who declare 'no peace without justice in Palestine', are nonsensical because they involve an element (namely justice), which threatens the presence of the Israelis on the lands that they control. Israelis know that what was done to the Palestinians by their forefathers before 75 or 100 years was unjust; it is absurd to even imagine that they do not know. As a matter of fact, the Zionist project is an undeniable plan of specific usurpation of land.

So, the rightful mediator cannot possibly relate justice to peace when trying to resolve the Palestinian problem; the reason for this is entirely psychological. To oppose adversary demands of justice, the Israelis will instinctively resort to cases of unjust deeds perpetrated by the Palestinians. Then, this will become the dialogue of the deaf, because every part will easily come up with numerous examples of unjust acts for which the other part will always have a 'convincing' interpretation.

If we refer to major acts, which cannot be misinterpreted and are accepted as such by all, we will encounter a particular and constant trait of the conflict; it all started with the total rejection of the United Nations Partition Plan for Palestine (also known as General Assembly resolution on Partition; 29 November 1947) by the Palestinians and the surrounding countries of Syria, Transjordan, Iraq and Egypt. In the ensuing low-scale civil war (1947), full scale civil war (1947-1948), and Arab-Israeli War (15 May 1948 - 10 March 1949), the Palestinians and their allies opposed indeed the international community. By so doing they lost. In other words, if they accepted the UN Partition Plan, they would have 50% of their land; by rejecting the Plan and by fighting against a resolution voted by a 2/3 majority of the UN member-states, they were left with only 22% of their land after the war, and in addition, no less than 700000 Palestinians were forced to migrate.

This trait persisted after 1948; it simply took another form, namely that of unrealistic evaluation of the rapport de force (balance of power); in fact, the anti-Israeli alliance lost all the wars. The so-called 'Egyptian victory' in the 1973 (Yom Kippur) War is in reality a filthy lie and a propaganda artifice, because what truly happened at the time (following meticulously prepared and secretly concluded agreements between US National Security Adviser Henry Kissinger and Anwar el Sadat's representative Hafez Ismail, the Egyptian National Security Adviser) is that Egypt got the Sinai Peninsula back, but Israel totally neutralized Egypt. This is how Tel Aviv managed to infiltrate first there and thence elsewhere.

<https://israeled.org/kissinger-ismail-meetings/>

<https://israeled.org/resources/documents/transcript-secret-talks-egyptian-national-security-hafez-ismail-us-national-security-adviser-henry-kissinger/>

I expanded on the topic because it is essential to understand that today, 75 years after the first explosion of the Palestinian problem at the international level, it is essential for a potential mediator to know that part of what the leading administrative figures and the most charismatic representatives will inevitably have in their heads will be forged myths and absurd misperceptions; they certainly know most of the true facts related to the topic, but they view them in the light of altered perceptions of reality. Consequently, this situation affects them sentimentally and mentally, and for this reason peace can certainly be made, but with no reference to justice.

This may look cynical or even odd to righteous people, but it truly is not; human justice is not Divine Justice, and every attempt to make it look similar to that concept will certainly fail. Divine Justice is forever; human justice is instantaneous. Among humans, justice can be made with some delay; but there is no 'justice' to be made for undeniable crimes committed by the great grandfather of a person against the great grandmother of another person. If this is so at the personal level, it must certainly be the same at the collective, social, ethnic or national level. It goes without saying that revenge (which can be taken after much time) is not justice; it is rather an injustice perpetrated in response to an earlier unjust act. That's why revenge is a synonym for retaliation.

Faithful people know that the Ultimate Judge is God; nothing ends here, and an injustice made in our material world brings forth an inevitable punishment either during our lifetime or in the Hereafter. But those, who intentionally commit crimes now in revenge of evil deeds and crimes perpetrated by others before 50 or 75 years, lose their souls in vain. No one comes to this world as an avenger. These things must be very clear to anyone willing to suggest solutions to a grave problem that gets incessantly worse.

By all means, one has to always bear in mind that the condition of a winner, who is not sure of his victory, is never enviable. Israelis know that in few months, they can destroy all the buildings of Gaza and they can push the entire local population out. I don't expand on the consequences which may cause further wars, but I limit myself in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. However, the top Israeli governmental and military authorities also know that even with the entire Gazan population evacuated, the Palestinian problem will not end. Israelis will still have to live with the Palestinians of the West Bank and with those called '1948 Palestinians' in Israel proper; their grave radicalization will be inevitable. Even if the Israeli authorities manage to effectively evacuate them all at a later date, the only possible result will be that Israel will then have to face extremely noxious developments in surrounding lands and to expect a real war of attrition involving attacks from the North, the East, and the Southwest. It will never end.

II. Two conditions for success in achieving peace between Israelis and Palestinians

That is why the position of a mediator between a winner, who is not sure of his victory, and a loser, who reached a level in which he has nothing more to lose, can be effective and his work successful only under two conditions:

- he has to leave justice aside and to compartmentalize the past (in other words, to put the jinn in a bottle) and

- he has to find another context in which to place the entire problem and thus, by introducing new factors, manage to assuage the worries of the winner and to console the sorrow of the loser.

Through this approach, the effective mediator is not in search of justice, but peace. This implies that all the necessary guarantees will be offered to both parts and that major concern will be deployed as to how no further hatred, rancor, and malignancy will be allowed to take hold of the hearts of people. Justice and equity will have to apply from the moment the new agreement is signed.

Consequently, and in striking contrast to the Oslo Accords, great effort will be carried out and detailed measures will be taken as regards the educational systems, the scientific life, the intellectual milieu, the national identity and the cultural integrity, the socio-behavioral principles, and the moral values of both nations. Politics do not and actually cannot play an exclusive role in the negotiations and the deliberations concerning the resolution of this long conflict; quite contrarily, the civil society -from both sides- must come to the forefront. The negotiations will have to look like an initial encounter between two communities meant to live together in peace.

Final success will be achieved when all fears, doubts and worries will disappear from the minds and the hearts of both sides. Fully understanding this need, I came up with the proposal for an initiative, which I am sure that Kazakhstan can effectively carry out. My responses to the questions asked by my Muslim friend can be better assessed in the light of the aforementioned thoughts.

III. Why the entire population of Gaza should be temporarily relocated for 3-4 years to Kazakhstan

At this very moment, Israel is under an unprecedented shock; this is attested on many occasions and at all levels of the Israeli administration, army and society. The acts of the military forces dispatched in Gaza testify to unnecessary brutality that causes further damage to Israel. There are not many in the Israeli political elite to understand that it is absolute pointless to attempt to exterminate an elusive adversary while at the same time massacring dozens of thousands of innocent civilians, children, women and elders who cannot possibly be held as responsible for the 7th October 2023 attacks. By so acting, Israel turns against itself the outright majority of people worldwide and sends an alarming warning to capitals of great nuclear powers like Beijing and Moscow.

The disregard shown by Israel to the numerous Muslim states for many long decades did not have an impact; this was due to the, hypocritical but undetected, Western support to Tel Aviv that the Israelis quite unfortunately for them have taken as true and sincere for too long. It was also due to the importance that the major Western countries (US, Germany, France, England, Italy) happened to have at the economic, military, diplomatic and political levels. However, this situation does not exist anymore. The Western powers are eclipsed by the rising BRICS at all levels; even more importantly, by allying with the BRICS, other -hitherto deemed unimportant- countries started acquiring a greater impact on the world affairs.

Israel needs therefore a certain space of time to absorb the shock and to realize that not only the Hamas attacks were a dreadful and horrible event, but also that it took place in 2023 - and not 1991 or in 2001. The world is not anymore as many among the country's ruling elite think or believe.

I therefore proposed that the entire population of Gaza should be temporarily relocated for 3-4 years for two reasons:
- first, the country is being destroyed by the invading Israeli army, which leaves ruins everywhere; what has already been done in the northern part of Gaza will take place in the southern sector too. It is clear that there is no force, no state, in the world that will interfere in order to stop Israel by force; if this was attempted by a nuclear power, it would apparently entail nuclear confrontation. So, the Western nuclear powers (US, France and England) are certain that no other nuclear power (Russia, China, India, Pakistan and Iran) will be exposed to reprisals only for the sake of the Palestinians.

It is therefore evident that for the main targets of the Israeli military operations to be achieved, Israel will need to push the totality of the Gazan populations out of Gaza Strip to North Sinai, Egypt. This intention risks certainly giving an entirely different dimension to this hitherto limited war and triggering a major conflict in the region. Either Egypt's el-Sisi is going to enter to war with Israel to prevent the expulsion of Palestinians from Gaza or he will fail to oppose this and will be overthrown in a most thunderous Islamist rebellion. In the case of an Islamist insurgence, the new Islamist regime of Egypt will inevitably clash with Israel in a most bloody war.

By intervening in Gaza as mediator between Israelis and Palestinians and by offering a plan for peace, involving also a temporary (for 3-4 years) relocation of the entire population of Gaza in Kazakhstan, Astana offers

- to Israel the opportunity to peacefully achieve their military goals (total elimination of Hamas) without further casualties;
- to Egypt the chance to avert all nefarious scenarios, namely a war, a revolt, and/or a permanent relocation ('resettlement') of the Gazan populations in North Sinai (that many extremist Zionists want to carry out);
- to Palestinians the perspective of safe survival, peaceful relocation, humane living conditions in the near future (within the next few months), and return back home under better, highly improved, terms after few years;
- to Chinese and Indians the possibility to get initially involved as partners of Kazakhstan in the construction of the new urban centers to accommodate the temporarily relocated Gazans and thus later make a strong impact as warranty powers of the final accord between the states of Israel and Palestine.

- second, the unprecedented destruction of the local infrastructure caused during the Israeli military operations in the northern sector of Gaza is only the preliminary stage of this war. After the entire local population is evacuated (one way or another), the Israeli army will carry out similar operations in the southern sector of the Strip; that's why I suggested and I do hope that this part of military activities will take place peacefully and with no more casualties. It is to be anticipated that the Israelis will continue demolishing innumerable buildings in search of potential terrorists, hidden arms, and secret passageways to Egypt. They will apparently do the same in the labyrinthine system of underground tunnels of Gaza that were constructed over the past decades. This will surely take several months after the completion of the evacuation process.

Then, the ruins of Gaza will have to be removed and cleaned off. A totally new landscape will appear. This process will also take much time; in the meantime, a consortium of Kazakh, Chinese and Indian construction companies will prepare the complete design of New Gaza's urban plan. The building phase will certainly take more than two years according to the best scheduling calculations.

It goes without saying that the entire reconstruction of Gaza project will have to be undertaken under the meticulous inspection of Israel's military forces because the Israelis have to be placed in total command of all security measures so that they are fully and permanently aware that nothing will be in a position to be smuggled into Gaza again and no anti-Israeli activity will possibly take place in the Palestinian state that they will agree to accept and help build and recognize at the international level.

IV. Why the borders with Egypt from Rafah to Taba should be entirely closed forever

As it is well-known, the main issues for the Israelis are the safety and the security of their state; I stated this fact from the very beginning. In this regard, there is a truly crucial difficulty; security and safety are feelings, and this means that they are not possibly quantifiable.

One can measure the area and the population of a land, the performance of an economy, the demographics of a nation, the artifacts of a museum and the weapons of an army. The security and safety measures are indeed quantifiable; but the feeling of security or safety is not.

One can firmly quantify the training of soldiers, the knowledge of the officers, and the arguments of diplomats; but there is no such thing as a phobo-meter to help us measure the fear, the worries, and the anxiety of people – let alone the consternation and the angst of statesmen and politicians who do not trust the intentions of their neighbors and do not believe the words of the rulers of the surrounding countries. The suspicions about the ulterior motives of the others are not a quantifiable affair.

The parallel that one can draw, rephrasing the contrast that I made in the third paragraph of the present article, is the following; coming to the table of negotiations, both sides will instinctively and reciprocally acknowledge that

- the Israelis have lost their safety, their security, and their trust of the Palestinians;
- the Palestinians have lost their land.

There is evident loss on either side, but the type of loss is of diverse nature.

One can therefore conclude that both sides' desiderata are -at the same time- unequal and different.

The loss of the Palestinians is visible to the naked eye; and so is the loss of the Israelis because, as I already stated, their overreaction to the 7th October 2023 attacks and their asymmetrical response to Hamas' killings fully demonstrate that they are under the impact of a shock.

Furthermore, it is also known that for a very long period the Palestinian resistance movements and organizations did not set as final target of the Palestinian nation the acceptance of the UN Partition Plan for Palestine, but they constantly evoked the total annihilation of the state of Israel. Following the signing of the Oslo Accords (1993), Hamas started a campaign against them, thus dragging a certain part of the Palestinian people to extreme positions, which were always at the antipodes of the UN General Assembly Resolution 181 (II). <https://documents-dds-ny.un.org/doc/RESOLUTION/GEN/NR0/038/88/PDF/NR003888.pdf?OpenElement>

The radicalization of the resistance against a formidable adversary can have negative results, and this is what actually happened over the past two decades, notably after the death of Yasser Arafat.

That is why I believe that, if peace negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians can ever have a chance to end in a true, sincere and final agreement, the state of Israel must be offered full responsibility for the security and the safety of both states. In other words, the Israeli security forces must be in full control of

- a) the borders with Egypt and Jordan,
- b) the harbors, and
- c) the airports.

I don't mention the borders with Lebanon and Syria, because the Palestinian state does not have borders with these two states. Unity of land and unity of people are to be safeguarded as West Bank and Gaza shall be linked with elevated highways and underground trains.

However, to erase every reason of fear and anxiety from the minds and the hearts of the Israelis, an effective mediator should offer them the exclusive privilege to guard the borders and have control over every person and every item, i.e. every baggage, parcel, and cargo that enters the land in which the two states will coexist.

The basic concept behind my approach, which involves exclusive Israeli control of the borders with Egypt and Jordan, is that of a complete enclave; to put it otherwise, for security reasons, Palestine must become an entire enclave within Israel. A small strip of 100 m wide land across the Palestinian-Jordanian and the Gazan-Egyptian borderlines will have to belong administratively (not politically) to Israel. When it will be the task of the Israelis to patrol the borders and to control all the persons and all the items that enter or exit the territory, they will not have any reason to worry about their security and safety.

There will certainly be a civilian police authority in the state of Palestine, but it will be trained, equipped and supervised by the state of Israel. In addition, as I already said, a major effort will be deployed (in striking contrast to the processes and the methods used before the Oslo Accords) at the level of education, science, culture, and civil society.

Every indication noticed and every incident occurred on either side, which may have involved racial contempt, ethnic disregard, social enmity, religious antagonism or spiritual/national superiority will have to be timely and properly denounced, tackled and resolved.

V. Why all the existing structures on the surface of the earth (in West Bank) should be entirely demolished and removed

In fact, what I suggest for the West Bank is a mere repetition of what I proposed for the Gaza Strip first. Consequently, all the Israeli settlers shall first be permanently relocated elsewhere in Israel; their urban infrastructure shall remain intact and then be offered to the West Bank Palestinians, who shall be temporarily relocated to Kazakhstan (after the Gaza Palestinians return in the newly reconstructed Gaza) and then return.

The temporary relocation of the West Bank Palestinians to Kazakhstan will offer Israelis plenty of time to fully inspect the land, the structures, and the underground, remove potentially smuggled and hidden arms and ammunitions, and perfectly clear the territory up.

The repetition of the temporary relocation process, which I suggested first for the populations of Gaza, and its application to the West Bank Palestinians will simply help remove all the remaining doubts and worries from the minds of the Israelis because the process will offer them the possibility to fully inspect the entire territory from where several attacks against Israelis emanated in the past.

VI. Why the Palestinian State should share common borders with Israel but not with Jordan

As I already said, a narrow, 100 m wide, strip shall be delineated alongside the old borderline between West Bank and Jordan; this strip shall belong administratively to Israel. As I stated above, to assuage all the worries and the security concerns of the Israelis, the state of Palestine must take the form of a complete enclave within Israel. The same concept must apply in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

VII. 1956, 2023, and a different contextualization of the Israeli-Palestinian problem

The concept of pacification between Israel and Palestine is inevitably linked to the rehabilitation, reconstruction, and salvation of the wider region between Eastern Mediterranean, India and Central Asia. This vast area comprises lands, which in the past belonged to major empires (like the Ottoman, the Safavid Iranian, and the Mughal states) and nomad kingdoms (like the Kazakh, Khiva, Bukhara and Kokand khanates).

The various types of colonial rule that were applied by the French and the English during the 19th and the early 20th centuries caused divisions, nefarious repercussions, conflicts and wars; quite contrarily, Russia/USSR -being a continental empire- was never a colonial power in Central Asia. That's why Kazakhstan is not Syria and Uzbekistan is not Yemen.

If we momentarily forget the nightmarish past of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict while looking back at the historical heritage of this wider region, we will instantaneously realize that many wars took place, great antagonisms developed, and sectarian rivalry was intentionally incited in numerous locations throughout this vast land. There are many spots where the evil colonial deeds can trigger endless wars and extraordinary destructions; in other words, the Israel-Palestine problem is only one of the numerous troubles deliberately caused by the colonial gangsters of France and England, and their successor, America.

Many among the numerous states, which exist nowadays in the said region, have been characterized by a certain form of direct or indirect involvement in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict: Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, Iran, Yemen, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, and Turkey. Notably and up to a certain extent, the Armenia-Azerbaijan hostilities and enmity hinge also on the Israel-Palestine conflict.

It is therefore essential for an effective mediator to envision not only the right means, the inventive approaches, the correct steps, the solid arguments, and the convincing motives that can bring permanent peace, coexistence and cooperation to Israelis and Palestinians, but also the way this propitious and auspicious development will affect positively other parts of the wider region. Slowly but steadily, other countries in the region, which currently do not officially recognize Israel should be called to enter into peace agreements with Israel, thus consolidating the final accord between Palestine and Israel.

For this purpose, after successfully mediating between Israelis and Palestinians, Kazakhstan -in cooperation with China, India and Russia- should spearhead further initiatives in view of first, several bilateral agreements of mutual recognition and pacification and second, a wider regional peace accord.

This perspective will consolidate the Israel-Palestine final accord; it is exactly the opposite of what was attempted by Donald Trump, namely the Abraham Accords or normalization treaties. The 7th October 2023 Hamas terrorist attacks were the logical consequence of those absurd and biased agreements, which are by now almost cancelled. It could not be otherwise; the Americans did not truly care to solve the Israel-Palestine problem, and this must sound as an alarming warning to the Israelis. The true target of the US diplomacy was merely a hypocritical initiative triggered by the ridiculous need to achieve spectacular but meaningless results, which would be duly used by the criminal mainstream mass media in order to fascinate ignorant and idiotic people across the Earth without truly changing anything.

Kazakhstan, China, India and Russia must make it clear to Israel that the only proper manner to proceed in order to convince several surrounding, currently unfriendly, countries to accept its existence and to consolidate and fortify its presence in the wider region is the exact opposite of all hitherto deployed attempts. Problems are like health issues; they are solved from inside out. The resolution of the Israel-Palestine problem is the inevitable priority no 1.

After all, it is clear to all that even if Saudi Arabia and Qatar recognized Israel and established diplomatic relations with Tel Aviv, there would still be more than 25 UN member states, which would not do so. More importantly Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, and Iran would still remain staunch opponents constantly demanding the dismantlement of the state of Israel. All these countries would certainly reconsider following a final peace accord between Israel and Palestine.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/International\_recognition\_of\_Israel#Present\_situation

At this moment, it would perhaps be necessary for Israeli decision makers to recall the humiliating experience that their country underwent in 1956; the older among them surely remember and the younger certainly studied in nauseating detail the Operation Kadesh and the Anglo-French-Israeli planned invasion of the Sinai Peninsula and the Suez Canal (between 29th October and 7th November 1956). This colonially brilliant project was highly successful from a military viewpoint, but it proved to be a disastrous failure for the three allied countries, as they were proven unable to resist the concerted diplomatic pressure exerted by the US and the USSR.

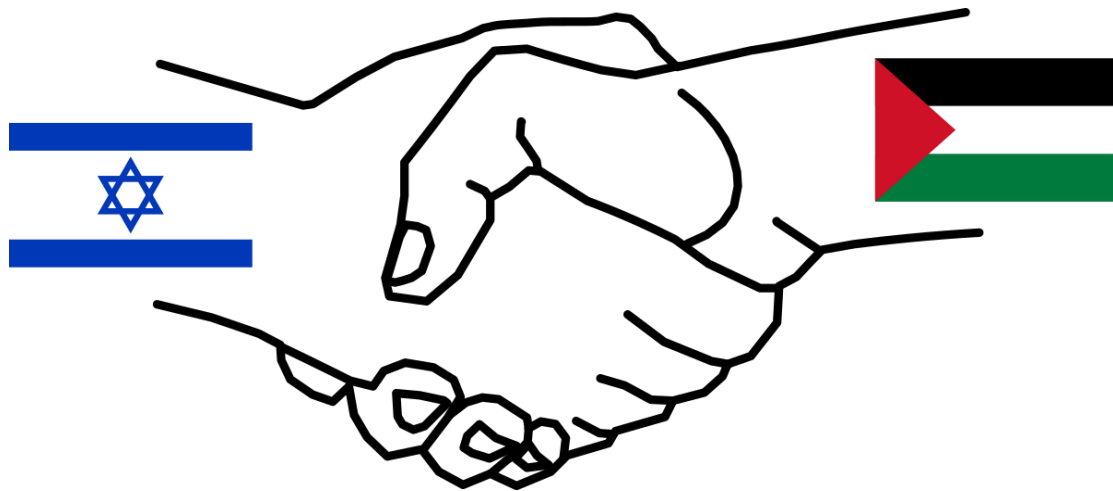

Israel realized then that it was on the wrong side of History, because when it refused to withdraw its army from Sharm el Sheikh, other parts of the Sinai Peninsula, and the Gaza Strip, President Eisenhower rebuffed all demands made by representatives of the Zionist lobby and spoke in public, stating that there was "no choice but to exert pressure upon Israel". Although initially the Tel Aviv government rejected the UN demand to remove all the Israeli soldiers from the lands that they had conquered in alliance with France and England, finally Ben Gurion was forced to call Eisenhower (8th November 1956) and tell him that Israel would finally comply with the UN Resolution 997 (ES-I), which was a US proposal (General Assembly vote of 2nd November 1956: 64 in favor, 6 abstentions, and 5 against, namely Australia, New Zealand, Britain, France, and Israel).

Due to that humiliation, Israel decided not to be anymore the close ally of Paris and London, and to start relying exclusively on the US as regards its security. As a matter of fact, 1956 was a turning point for Israel. From that year on, Israeli politics, defense and diplomacy were attached to and intertwined with the US administrations. Now, it is high time for the Israeli decision-makers to reconsider their alliance and bond with the Sick Man of the Western World, evaluate the multiple benefits ensuing from a Euro-Asiatic alliance with Kazakhstan, China, India, Russia and other major states, resolve the unnecessarily deteriorated Palestinian problem, enter into reciprocal and mutual recognition with major regional powers (Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia) and other neighboring countries (Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, Kuwait, Qatar, etc.), and finally become a full member state of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization and a significant partner of the world's major superpowers across the New Silk Road.

It is high time for Israel to choose:

- either to remain an ally of the West and experience further killings, terrorist attacks, wars and bloodshed
- or to abandon the West, become a partner of the East, and live in peace, cooperation and prosperity with all the other forces of the rising new, de-westernized, and multipolar world.

Israel's Problem is the West, not Hamas!

Response to Ayelet Gilboa's Letter about Hamas in Israel

Introduction

- I. The enormous educational divide between the Israelis and the Palestinians
- II. There is no nation without proper nation-building and National History

- III. The colonial trap was prepared for the Jews before the return (Aliyah)
  - IV. Helping Palestinians become a proper nation with a National History is the best line of defense for the Jewish state
  - V. Either Jewish Orientalists kill the colonial 'Arab' myth, liberating all the surrounding nations, or you will all be annihilated
  - VI. The Western colonial fabrication of 'Arabs', a nonexistent nation
  - VII. Intending to return as Jews, you arrived as Westerners
